A LOOK AT THE RESPECTABLE VICTORIAN AGE THROUGH THE EYES OF THE SUBVERSIVE UNDERGROUND WHOSE ISSUES ARE STILL ISSUES TODAY

JACK THE RIPPER will be presented by the USF Speech Department under the direction of Dr. Raymond Schneider, on March 9 and 10 in the St. Pete Campus Auditorium at 8 PM.

Dr. Schneider, associate professor of speech, has adapted the production from historical and biographical materials of the late 19th century. These include Jack the Ripper's explicit letters printed in the London Times, records of court cases, reflections on the lifestyle of the times from author Henry Mayhew and from the writings of Lord Acton, a social commentator of the times, and excerpts from "The Other Victorians" by Steven Marcus of Columbia University, well-known Victorian scholar.

"The Victorian era is traditionally thought of in terms of respectability, propriety, earnestness, stability and its success," according to Dr. Schneider. "It is a big, safe target, able to be criticized. But it wasn't all that grand."

The phrase "scenes from the buried life" deals with the counter-culture, the suppressed London underground, he explained. It also implies criminal action.

The program presented by the Speech Department and sponsored by the Student Activities, captures the atmosphere of the period and evokes images of both the elegance and slums of the period in sights and sounds of newspaper boys, horses and carriages, peanut vendors, street players and hurdy-gurdies.
