tampa bay history

Did you know that the Columbia Restaurant in Ybor City first opened as a saloon? That Egmont Key served as sentinel guarding Tampa Bay for nearly one hundred years?

These historical facts and many others were buried in books and documents until the department of history and College of Social and Behavioral Sciences at the University of South Florida dug them up in Tampa Bay History.

Tampa Bay History, a journal printed semi-annually, is based on historical research of subjects concerning the 15-county area surrounding Tampa Bay.

Again this year, "Tampa Bay History" calls upon writers and history buffs to enter their 2,500-5,000-word stories for a $100 first prize and $50 second prize and publication in the journal.

Last year's winners were Jack Holmes, director of the Louisiana Collection Series on Colonial Louisiana and an expert on Spanish activities in the Gulf of Mexico. Second place winner was Jon Wilson, an editorial writer for the St. Petersburg Times and a graduate student in history at USF.

This year's deadline for the Tampa Bay History contest is Sept. 1, 1983. All stories should be typewritten and double-spaced and based on historical research concerning the 15-county area surrounding Tampa Bay.

For further information on the contest, contact the managing editor, Tampa Bay History, department of history, University of South Florida, Tampa, FL, 33620 or call (813) 974-2807.
