SEAWATCH, a program of the Florida Institute of Oceanography (FIO), is inviting Tampa Bay area sport divers to participate in a year-long project to survey and monitor artificial reefs in the Gulf of Mexico off Pinellas County. Results of the survey will be incorporated into the planned revision of Pinellas County's artificial reef charts.

A meeting to start the project was held on April 8.

"This will be a very interesting project. As most divers know, artificial reefs provide the best habitat for fish and many other sea life," said project coordinator DR. JAMES MILLER of FIO, located at the St. Petersburg Campus.

Miller said the project is a cooperative effort by FIO, St. Petersburg Junior College (SPJC) and the Clearwater Marine Science Center, Inc. Dr. HAMARD MATHEWS of SPJC, an expert on artificial reefs, will provide technical and scientific guidance for the project and DENNIS KELLNERGER, executive director and marine biologist of the Clearwater Marine Science Center, will supervise the day-to-day operation and data collection.

Funds are being provided by the Max and Victoria Dreyfus Foundation of New York City to reimburse divers participating in the program for boat, gas and air fills.

The SEAWATCH artificial reef program is an outgrowth of the National Fishing Enhancement Act enacted in November 1984. The act provides for the establishment of national standards for artificial reefs that stress improvement of fishery resources and opportunities while minimizing risks to the environment.

For more information about SEAWATCH contact FIO in the Marine Science Building or call 893-9100.
