SCULPTURE COMPETITION
WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. --- NCNB Plaza Associates will conduct a $30,000 sculpture competition among southeastern artists for a work to be installed here. The sculpture or sculpture/fountain will become the focal point of an outdoor plaza area in front of the new downtown Winston-Salem headquarters of North Carolina National Bank.

The sponsors are seeking "a major work of open-air sculpture that will add greatly to the visual climate of the downtown area and call attention to the accomplishments and talent of our regional artists." The commission will be awarded by a special jury on the following timetable: Artists are invited to submit slides of their previous work no later than October 13, 1972. The jury will screen the entrants down to five finalists in early November, and the finalists will be asked to prepare models and specific proposals for the Winston-Salem site. Final judging of the five finalists and the awarding of the commission will occur in early January, 1973. The competition is being managed by Ted Potter, Director, The Gallery of (cont'd)
Steve McQueen plays Boon in "The Reivers".

Two important featured stars in "THE REIVERS" won't receive screen credit, but they play an integral part in the film's comedy. One is a jaunty yellow 1905 Winton Flyer which transports McQueen and fellow reivers on their adventures. To avoid mechanical breakdowns of a genuine antique car, a custom coach craftsman was commissioned to build a new turn-of-the-century model which would operate with the efficiency of a modern automobile. To McQueen, who has raced daredevils in such films as "The Thomas Crown Affair," "Bullitt" and "The Great Escape," the 20 m.p.h. top speed of the Flyer was quite a change of pace.

Mannader, a six-year-old jet black gelding is the unique scene stealer in "THE REIVERS" playing a sardonic-loving race horse named Lightning, as uniquely a candidate for the race track as Snoopy to his Sopwith Camel. Theodora Van Runkle, whose costumes for "Bonnie and Clyde" revitalized the Hollywood industry, created the wardrobe for "THE REIVERS," and she may well bring back those fashion trends of the early 20th Century which sparked with fancy lace gowns and double-breasted suits.

"THE REIVERS" is a picture of enormous charm, and the reivers themselves play with life as if they were a carnival ride to be revolved with the zest of youth realizing for the first moment that the spirit is boundless, that life itself is a joyous roller coaster ride from which one does not need to disembark. It is a motion picture that reaffirms, in an era where we often live our lives in terms of depravity, that laughter is still the finest gift we can give to ourselves.
SAILING EXPERTS COMBINE TO TEACH NEWCOMERS

Wide known experts in the art of sailing boats combine forces to instruct beginners during the fall class of the sailing school, Boca Ciega Yacht Club, starting on Friday, October 6th.

Open to the public, these classes will show the beginner how to break into this fascinating sport, with six weekly sessions on Friday nights and later, on Saturdays by invitation of host owners, aboard sailing craft belonging to the members of the host club in Gulfport. Trips are arranged to sailmakers and boat builders. On November 17th, successful graduates will be awarded the coveted Sailing Diploma. Total cost for the entire course is only $12.00 per person.

All of this is a labor of love by long experienced sailing experts. Jennings, internationally known racing skipper and two time winner of the North American Yacht Racing Union Championship.

The Boca Ciega Yacht Club has been oversubscribed by student applicants in 1967, 68, 69, 70 and 71. This class, by necessity, is limited in number. To avoid disappointment, students should send names and a $12.00 check for each person, to the Club at once. Opening night will be too late. Information may be obtained by calling the Club at 343-6148 or members at 581-6849; 826-3502; or 360-8853.

The sport of sailing offers an increasingly fascinating and relaxing escape from the rigors of every day humdrum living. Here, in the Tampa Bay area, with year round mild weather, we are located in one of the most fortunate sailing areas in the nation.

Steve McQueen plays Boon in 'The Reivers':

A reiver is a rascal and a rogue, and Steve McQueen plays Boon in Cinema Center Films rollicking adaptation of William Faulkner's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, "The Reivers." Following closely McQueen's enormously successful "Bullitt," "The Reivers" provides an exciting change of pace for the world famous actor, whose sophisticated screen rebels have brought an electric excitement to the celluloid gallery. McQueen now establishes himself as a comedy actor of rare timing and talent.

National General Pictures release of "The Reivers," on Fri., Oct. 6 in the USFSP Auditorium, relates the adventurous and hilarious journey of a 12-year-old, Mitch Vogel, who emerges into manhood as he embarks on a spirited jaunt from Mississippi to Memphis with McQueen and Rupert Crosse in a vintage 1905 Winton Flyer.

Set in Old Mississippi at a time when tranquility was still a way of life, "The Reivers" is a human story about people with a zest for life, an exuberance about being alive.

‘The Reivers’ is a human story about people with a zest for life, an exuberance about being alive.

To capture Faulkner's mythical town of Jefferson the crew of "The Reivers" traveled to Carrolton, Mississippi, which has retained the old-world flavor and charm of the turn of the century. There the color cameras recorded the stars at work, with many of the 500 townspeople employed as extras for some of the sequences.

Director: Mark Rydell, who had his choice of film scripts after his sensational directorial debut with "The Fox," enthusiastically accepted "The Reivers" as a second motion picture assignment because the script by Irving Ravetch and his wife, Harriet Frank, Jr. had the humor, pathos and spirit so rarely combined in a screenplay. Ravetch and Miss Frank have written two of her screenplays based on Faulkner’s works, "The Long Hot Summer" and "The Sound and the Fury," and hold an Academy Award nomination for the Paul Newman success, "Hud."

Rydell embarked on a nationwide talent search to find the right juvenile actor for the important role of Lucius, McQueen’s youthful companion. He and Executive Producer Robert E. Relyea and Producer Irving Ravetch interviewed over 1,500 boys for the part before they found the perfect choice in Mitch Vogel, a junior high school student from Costa Mesa, California. Mitch has the unaffected wistful exuberance of boyhood so significant to the storyline.

Sharon Farrell, a beautiful new blonde actress, was recruited for the role of Corrie, the shapely fille de joie who becomes part of the them using escapades. Sharon, a graduate of numerous television commercials and half a hundred television series, has been featured in "A Lovely Way to Die" with Kirk Douglas and "Marlowe" opposite James Garner. Famed character actor Will Geer, who has won critical acclaim in such productions as "In Cold Blood" and "Bandolero," portrays Boss, the grandfather and benevolent but strict head of the McCaslin family. Rupert Crosse, who helped create and later appeared in John Cassavetes' highly regarded "Shadows," is cast as Ned McCaslin, the Negro hired hand and companion of McQueen in the film’s escapades.

Rounding out the celebrated cast are such familiar screen faces as Lonny Chapman, Clifton James, Juano Hernandez and Ruth White (who was nominated for a Tony Award as best Broadway stage actress last year for her starring role in "The Birthday Party").
