A mod devil, sporting metal-rimmed glasses, red socks and long hair, negotiates and "acquires" the soul of a meek, love-sick cook (Stanley) in exchange for seven wishes in a gloriously funny thinking- man's version of the Faust tale.

Aided by his employees, The Seven Deadly Sins (Raquel Welch as Lillian Lust is a scene-grabber), the devil deftly foils Stanley's attempts to win his lady love. This brightly stylized, way-out English comedy filled with sly wit and devastating comment on today's world is directed by Stanley Donen with a whimsical touch. The many targets in this social satire range from theology to sex and the methods of attack range from subtle farce to pure burlesque.

JULIAN CALENDAR
The first modern Calendar was put into use in 45 B.C. by Julius Caesar who decreed that henceforth there should be three years of 365 days each, and then one year of 366 days, in perpetual cycle. This became known as the Julian Calendar, and began the custom we still observe today of adding one day to the month of February every fourth year, or leap year as it is known.

Even though the Julian Calendar was an enormous improvement over previous systems, it still was not completely accurate. Since there are approximately 365 days in a solar year, the Julian Calendar was reasonably satisfactory for many years - but there are not exactly 365.24 days in a year. The exact solar year consists of 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 47.8 seconds. The difference of about seven minutes becomes appreciable in the course of several centuries.

GREGORIAN CALENDAR
The final Calendar correction was done in 1582 by Pope Gregory XIII, and the corrected Calendar that we use today is called the Gregorian Calendar. First, in order to make up for all the days which had accumulated since the beginning of the Julian Calendar, Pope Gregory XIII decreed the elimination of 10 days from the year 1582. This was done, and in many countries the day after October 1582 became October 15, 1582.

Pope Gregory XIII also installed the leap year rule which is old and still in effect, and which will serve us for more than a thousand years hence. The Gregorian leap year rule provides for dropping a day from every centennial year (ending in 00) whose number cannot be divided by 400. Thus, a day was dropped in the years 1700, 1800 and 1900. This meant that the years 1700, 1800 and 1900 were not leap years, i.e. had 28 days in February. The day will not be dropped in the year 2000, so the month of February will have 29 days. The error in our present Calendar is less than one day every 3000 years, so although the Gregorian Calendar is a great improvement over the Julian Calendar, it still is not 100% accurate.

ADOPTION OF GREGORIAN CALENDAR
Although the initial adoption of the Gregorian Calendar was in 1582, its use was by no means universal. As might be expected, the first countries to adopt the new Calendar were primarily Roman Catholic Countries did not adopt the Gregorian Calendar until later. The American Colonies made the switch in 1752, when the whole British Empire changed. September 2, 1752 was followed by September 14, 1752. Day adjustment was not needed, the Julian Calendar having added another day between 1752 and 1753. Dates preceding sometimes designated for Old Style. Thus, George Washington’s birthday is really February 11, 1732 (OS), and only change to the Gregorian Calendar was his birthday.
established as February 22, 1732. Most dates in American History have been converted to New Style, or Gregorian dates. Other countries have been even slower in adopting the new Calendar: Japan, 1873; China, 1912; Greece, 1924; Turkey, 1927.

CONVERSION
To make the conversion from Julian dates to Gregorian dates, add ten days to the Julian date from October 5, 1582 through February 28, 1700. Then, add eleven days to Julian dates from March 1, 1700 through February 28, 1800; add twelve days to Julian dates from March 1, 1800 through February 28, 1900; add thirteen days to Julian dates from March 1, 1900 through February 29, 2000; etc.
