Two USF St. Petersburg faculty named professor emeritus

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA. (May 20, 2002) -- Two recently retired professors at the University of South Florida St. Petersburg were awarded professor emeritus status. Eleanor Guetzloe, a recognized expert on suicide prevention and advocate for the emotionally disturbed, and Art Schwartz, a professor of finance, received the distinction that recognizes special contributions by faculty to the university.

Guetzloe, who until December 2001 directed the master's program in special education from USF St. Petersburg's College of Education, has been published widely regarding the emotionally handicapped and suicide prevention. Her advocacy established the benchmark for legislation to ensure that children with emotional problems continue to get the services they deserve.

Schwartz, who also retired in December 2001, was president of both the American Real Estate Society and the International Real Estate Society. He has served on numerous academic journal editorial boards and has been published frequently. He recently received the Bert Kruijt Service Award by the International Real Estate Society.
